COURSES TAUGHT

- Migration and Governance in the Global South (Graduate). Developed course considering multi-level management of migration, informal mechanisms of regulation, and how mobility and diaspora challenge analytical and practical presumptions informing political and scholarly approaches to development, human security, and humanitarian assistance. Taught 2015 (Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy).
- Migration & Human Rights: Movement, Community, and Mobilization (Undergraduate/Graduate). Developed multiple iterations exploring the limits of legal and institutional migrant rights protections by way of identifying the de facto mechanisms and mind-sets that engender and endanger rights and human security. Course explores human rights practice in urban spaces across the world and reviews strategies for claiming, enforcing, or restricting rights and the implications for understanding rights and human security. Taught 2009-2015 (University of the Witwatersrand and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy).
- Mobility, Space & Power (Graduate). Developed course bringing together political scientific, anthropological, geographic and sociological approaches to the construction of power, authority and space. It examines three sites where rapid mobility is transforming political practice: refugee camps, border-zones and socially diverse urban centres. Drawing heavily from sub-Saharan Africa, case material is presented in global comparative perspectives. Taught 2008-2012 (University of the Witwatersrand).
- Introduction to Migration & Displacement (Graduate). Developed course highlighting intersections of human mobility with debates and themes in the social sciences and law. Instead of developing technical skills or policy recommendations, the course employs human mobility as a heuristic for reconsidering fundamental epistemological and empirical presumptions informing contemporary social and political theory. Taught 2004-2014 (University of the Witwatersrand).
- Researching Migration: Methods and Approaches (Graduate). Co-developed practical course strengthening students' capacity to conduct social research on issues related to migration, displacement, and humanitarianism. Focuses on understanding research objectives and logics and the practical challenges of conducting methodologically sound and theoretically relevant research in the complex and dynamic environments in which migrants are often found. Taught 2006-2010 (University of the Witwatersrand).

- Introduction to Refugee Studies and Forced Migration (Professional Graduate). Part of a teaching team introducing practitioners and aspiring students to fundamental issues in refugee studies. Topics included legal frameworks, international relations, gender based violence, humanitarian interventions, and global migration and displacement dynamics. Taught 2006 (Refugee Studies Centre, Oxford University).
